Come and explore the gardens, walk on the grass and stop to smell the flowers. Come and meet the children who play, dream and care for them. Sit for a while to listen to their chatter. These colourful stories celebrate our connection with nature through the eyes of children wherever they may be. These are their little gardens. What will your little garden be?

A quote from the book:

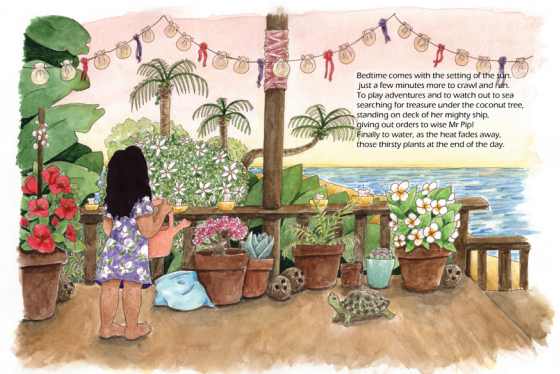

*"Just before tea is the time to water
 and along comes skipping the gardener's daughter.
 Her favourite colour is not hard to guess
 and she knows that yellow for her is the best.
 Just organised patches of scented colour
 daffodils, tulips and roses all summer.
 And high above, watching over it all, the robin
 sits on the old stone wall."*

Just before tea is the time to water
 and along comes skipping the gardener's daughter.
 Her favourite colour is not hard to guess,
 and she knows that yellow for her is the best.
 Just organised patches of scented colour
 daffodils, tulips and roses all summer.
 And high above, watching over it all,
 the robin sits on the old stone wall.

Growing vegetables in the sun,
 there's lots of work before the day is done.
 Tomatoes, sweet and red
 and watermelons as big as Grandpa said.
 Aubergines ripe and rosy to fry
 and beans that trail high up into the sky.
 He proudly gathers them all together
 and mother will cook whatever the weather.

Bedtime comes with the setting of the sun,
 just a few minutes more to crawl and fawn.
 To play adventures and to watch out to sea
 searching for treasure under the coconut tree.
 standing on deck of her mighty ship,
 giving out orders to wise Mr Pipi.
 Finally to water, as the heat fades away,
 those thirty plants at the end of the day.
